

When does your child need professional care support?

A quick guide for families and caregivers of medically vulnerable children

Signs Your Child May Need Support

- Requires tube feedings, tracheostomy care, or ventilator support at home
- Needs seizure monitoring, respiratory support, or airway suctioning daily
- Cannot attend school safely without on-site medical supervision
- Recent hospitalization or new diagnosis has increased care needs
- You're managing complex clinical tasks alone and it's affecting your family
- Your child would benefit from trained support to participate fully in school life
